

Aneurin Bevan University Health Board

Supporting the future workforce

- School aged children educated on variety of healthcare roles and careers

Aneurin Bevan University Health Board (ABUHB) has worked with primary school aged children to educate them on the different roles and careers that deliver health services. The project challenges stereotypes around historical gender misconceptions associated with different roles and uses diverse individuals from the workforce.

The work experience offer at ABUHB has also been refreshed to offer children and young people a chance to experience what working life is like throughout the health board's many sites and departments and to inspire them to consider the NHS for their future careers.

The health board intends to generate a bilingual toolkit that can be used by all schools within the region to showcase the range of roles.